

The Virgin Fish of Babughat: Babughater Kumari Maachh

E—5

Add the first name Tarini to his Chakrabarty, and I could guess even without looking at him that he must be an old man. He really is but what is old age—what are its signs? Does old age appear on the forehead, in the eyes, on the wrinkled skin or grey hair? Or is old age merely the weight of experience gathered through a certain number of years, and the mark it leaves on the mind and the body? I don't know the answers, and what a tragedy it is that I should unnecessarily puzzle myself with these questions long after all answers have fled from the cage of my mind. All that I know is that when this gentleman, Tarini Chakrabarty, first came here—I think he came after me—he seemed to be old or what we normally call old. Does he still seem so? I am not so sure. Everybody seems to have gone through the grind of sameness and now appears alike, indistinguishable. Our eyes look so identical now that any one of these eyes could be put in a museum of the future in a lighted, temperature-controlled glass case to symbolize our collective existence. Our mutual differences are now reduced to such an extent that any moment I might begin to doubt the identity of the man running in front. Is he Tarini Chakrabarty or Benu Haldar or is that I myself?

But why is Tarini Chakrabarty running? Curiosity compels me to stop here and find out. It is a credit to myself that I have been able to keep my curiosity still alive. Such incidents are not common here and it is only natural to want to find out the reason. I came out when the morning sun was washing the courtyard clean. I watched the old man run, stopped him and asked what
